 - Animal Poison control center(s)
 - Animal shelters in your area (in case you get separated from your pet)
 - Pet insurance policy number
- Copies of proof of ownership papers (registration information, adoption papers, proofs of purchase, and microchip/tattoo information to store in the evacuation kit).
List each of your animals and their species/breed, age, sex, color, and other distinguishing characteristics.
- Medical records and/or list of medical needs, if your cat has a medical condition or is on medication.
- Two weeks supply of medication and any supplements (include at least one dose of your monthly heartworm preventive) in a water-proof container (rotate every two months). Have chemical ice packs and a small, insulated cooler if medication needs refrigeration.
- If your cat is taking medication regularly, include that information on a separate ID tag
- If your cat becomes fearful during storms, sudden changes in routine, or separation from you, contact your veterinarian regarding tranquilizers or calming remedies that could be included in your kit.
- First aid kit

A large plastic tub or garbage can with a lid can be used to store these disaster preparedness items for your cat. Tape a copy of this list to the inside of the cover for future reference.
Include a calendar indicating when certain items should be/were replaced.

In addition to the items listed above, include anything you use for your cat on a weekly or monthly basis. A good idea is to collect all the materials for your disaster preparedness kit, and then experiment by using only those items to care for your cat the next two weeks. That way, you will easily find out if you need to include other items, or a larger quantity of certain things.
